HIGH DEATH RATE AND PROSPERITY

rate by rallway train accidents than as in the southern states. reported for 1908, business depression and its lessened pressure being credited largely for the improved showing made largely for the improved showing made in 1902. This is confirmed by the statement of the Chicago statistician for the railways that "the feverish rush of prosperity" had much to do with the high death rate in train accidents. Meanwhile, however, the death rate of "trespassers," children and people who "didn't see the train coming" maintains its normal grisly record over tains its normal, grisly record, over 6,000 men, women and children each year. Blame for this great annual holocaust is laid both upon the railways and upon the public officials who fail notoriously in the United States to guard railway tracks and crossings in the United States as they do abroad-particularly in England. The railways under compulsion are spending many millions to elevate their tracks in large militions to deviate their traces in large cities, in Chicago the cost to date having been about $50,000,000 with $60,000,000 more to be done. "The states and cities have been criminally negligent in failure to police the rights of way of steam railways and to provide laws and warnings which will deter children and adults from trespassing or taking such risks, risks that would subject persons to prompt arrest in England," declares a bulletin issued by a League of Pub-lic Safety which has begun agitation for better public protection. "The steam rallways last year killed 5.560 'trespassers' and 940 who were not trespassing—16 times as many as were killed in the train accidents about which so much is heard. Adequate steps have not been taken to keep people away from this jurgernaut 220,000. ple away from this juggernaut, 230,000

GAPS IN THE G. A. R.

When the veterans of the 6,057 posts of the Grand Army of the Republic as-semble for the roll call on Memorial day next week the gaps in the ranks will be greater than ever before, for the records in Chicago show that since May 30, 1908, nearly 15,000 "comrades" have passed to the last muster. The Army now numbers barely 200,000. Less than 20 years ago there was douess than 20 years ago there was double that number and even on Dec. 31, 1907, the various departments showed a total membership of 225,157. One by one, however, and two by two, the men who fought at Gettysburg and Chancellorsville and Antietam have dropped lorsville and Antietam have dropped from the ranks and each year fewer voices have answered to the roll call. The death rate that 20 years ago was less than 1 per cent has now increased to 5 per cent. Slowly but surely the ranks of the equally brave confederate veterans have dwindled until today but a tithe remain of Early's men and Morgan's troopers and the almost invingan's troopers and the almost invina lithe remain of Early's men and Morgan's troopers and the almost invincible armies of Lee and Beauregard. Not all the survivors are included in organizations, however. The rolls of the government still carried on the first of this month the names of 601,699 veterans of the Civil war. Illinois has always been prominent in the counci's of the G. A. R. The first post of the Army was organized in this state, at Decatur, April 6, 1866. There are 3,351 members today in Cook county, of which 2,935 are located in Chicago. New York state leads in the number of posts, with 598, followed by Pennsylvania, 526; Ohio, 520, and Illinois, 515. The Association of United Confederate Veterans was organized June 10, 1889, and has 1,300 camps with a memberand has 1,300 camps with a member-ship of about 60,000. A fresh indication of the growing esteem in which American art is now held abroad is the visit to Chicago of two European painters of the first held abroad is the visit to Chleago of two European painters of the first rank, whose avowed purpose in coming to the west is to get a better idea of the present methods of training practised on this side of the water. Their praises, coming hard on the heels of successes won by several artists of this country at the Parlis Salon this spring, call new attention to the fact that France is no longer preminent as the mother of arts. M. Alphonse Mucha, whose paintings and posters have made him celebrated throughout Europe, is one of the artists who have turned to this country. The other is Senor Joaquin Sorolla, whose brilliant landscapes and vivid scenes of modern Spanish life were honored in New York this winter. M. Mucha reached Chicago a few days ago and proceeded to get impressions at first hand by conducting special classes of students at the Art institute, which is the largest art school in the country. The enthusiasm of American sudents as opposed to those abroad was what first struck his attention. "The young artists here have the spirit that will produce things," he said, "they have the enthusiasm of Chicago and the west. Your methods are excellent. You are developing splendid draftsmen and workers in color and you have the advantage of having here in Chicago one of the greatest art schools in the world. I should like to settle here and do all my work in this congenial atmosphere if it were possible." Mr. Mucha spoke also of the spirit of helpfulness he noticed in American students, Senor Sorolla, who was to have been here at the same time was obliged to postpone his visit until fall but wrote a at the same time was obliged to post-pone his visit until fall but wrote a letter expressing equal interest and ad-miration of American work.

the campaign bureau of the American Bankers' association, Charles E. Sprague of New York, formerly president of the Savings bank section of the Bankers' association is quoted in this remarkable statement: "Had their deposits been in postal banks they would have been just as eager to draw and hoard or sell that money as any other money, and the government would have had to refuse payment of that which it had agreed to repay on demand. The national banks would have retained the postmasters' deposits, but would have very largely had them loaned out in Wall street. There would have been exactly the same stringency as occurred." As there now is an item of approximately half a billion dollars which banks have not been able to entice into circulation and which, if on deposit through the medium of postal banks, would guard against stringency and usually prevent any such disturbance as that of 1907. Mr. Sprague's assertion was in the nature of a boomerang, especially as he cheerfully ignored Uncle Sam's enormous cash resources, Bankers had refrained previously from such statements. Largely because Sam's enormous cash resources, Bankers had refrained previously from such statements. Largely because the federal government is not likely to resort to clearing house certificates in a pinch—'milk tickets for a hungry baby'—the postal savings measure for small sums was reported upon favorably by a senate commission after exhaustive inquiry and has grown to great popularity among the farming and laboring classes. Withdrawals during stringencies are largely by the small depositors who became alarmed for their mite if it is not in the hands of the federal government with its known vast resources. Some with its known vast resources. Some of the most prominent bankers of Chicago declare that the banking interests will be safeguarded by a system which will shift part of the depositors most easily stampeded from their books to the government's.

Crippling of amateur baseball in Chicago is threatened by the growth of the city, and if amateur baseball is crippled the future pennant chances is crippled the future pennant chances of Chicago will be given a black eye for the backlot has been the training ground for many of the heroes of big league play. Park commissioners have ruled that no more can be used for that game and as one promising baseman declared: "the kids will be up against it." Building is transforming the open lots and prairies so rapidly—and there are so very many teams—that the diamonds where many professionals learned the game have disappeared, or are going fast. Moreover, as the lamenting young baseman declared: "If the kids play on the street they have to keep one on the street they have to keep one eye on the ball and with the other look out for the officer. If they venture into a 2 x 4 lot in most cases the windows are too conspicuous." In one
